

WOMAN SEEKING $100,000 DAMAGES

HIS HOUSEKEEPER ACCUSES BALLERINO

SAYS HE BROKE HIS WORD

Jeanne Uhalt Says Employer Promised to Wed Her, but Failed to Keep Agreement—Brings Two Actions Against Him

Charging breach of promise, personal damage and non-payment of debt to the extent of $100,000, Miss Jeanne Uhalt yesterday brought suit in the superior court through Attorney E. L. Hutchison against Bartolo Ballerino, "former king of the cribs," whose housekeeper she has been for the past three years.

The charges against Ballerino are brought in two suits, one a breach of promise suit for $100,000 and the other a suit on debt for $7500.

According to the story told by the young woman in her complaints, Ballerino on September 1, 1902, asked her to marry him and represented his property at a valuation of $500,000. Half of this she was to have as soon as they were married but in the meantime as he said he was divorced he must have a housekeeper and she went to his home in that capacity.

Since that time the young woman alleges Ballerino has asked her fifty times to be his wife and has introduced her to all his friends as the woman he was about to marry.

Recently, the housekeeper says, she learned that Ballerino was still married to his first wife and therefore could not legally marry her. She now asserts that her friends mock and scorn her. That decent people will have nothing to do with her because of her employment in the Ballerino home and that she has been forever deprived of the hope of the love and association of any man who has any claims to respect and decency.

She asserts that where she expected to marry an "honest and honorable man" she has found Ballerino to be anything but "honest and honorable" and she further alleges that she has learned of Ballerino's "infamous connection" with the crib district.

She completed her complaint on the breach of promise allegation by asking $100,000 as a modest redress for the scorns and jeers of her former friends.

In her other complaint she asks $7500 for payment of her services as housekeeper in the Ballerino home for the past three years.
